

Knife Wielding Bandits Rob Curtis Hotel of $2,000

Whilst the East Kildonan police and R.C.M.P. are investigating, the two thugs who methodically wheeled the safe out of the office and took it away from the Curtis Hotel in East Kildonan early Tuesday morning are still at large. The loot consisted of between $2,000 and $2,500 in cash.

Brandishing ugly knives, they approached C. W. Clarkson, night clerk, who resides at 118 Leighton avenue, and Tymothy Ewashenko, night porter, informing the former "C'mon, this is a stick-up, gimme your keys," at the same time prodding him with a knife.

The men stood on either side of the startled clerk. With gloved left hands they closed their coat lapels over swarthy faces. Their right hands held the long knives.

They had entered by the front door and found Clarkson, a man over 65 years of age, sitting on the lobby chesterfield smoking a cigarette. He told them he had no keys. They replied by pulling him to his feet and, walking single file with Clarkson between them, went into the clerk's enclosure.

When ordered to unlock the cash drawer Clarkson still maintained he had no key. One of the thugs found it under the counter. He forced the clerk to unlock the drawer then reached in with a gloved hand and scooped out the money.

Inside the drawer he also found a key to a second cash drawer. He also emptied this of its contents.

Then: "Where's the safe?"

Clarkson said he didn't know.

The clerk was led down a 30-foot hall to a door entering the beer parlor where Ewashenko was cleaning up.

Both were then led to a beer storage cooler at the front of the hotel. "You're not going to put us in there—we'll freeze to death," Clarkson said. Although both were in their shirt sleeves, they were put inside. Temperature in the large room was 40 degrees and blacker than ink and really cold," both claimed.

They pounded on the six-inch wooden door with a metal bar for almost three hours, until 5 a.m., before being released.

In an upstairs bedroom, day clerk Pat McKean heard the muffled noise. He thought it was workmen. Then he decided it was too early, so phoned down for Clarkson. Getting no answer, he hurried down to investigate and was horrified to find Clarkson and Ewashenko in the cooler. The East Kildonan police were immediately notified.

Clarkson claimed both men were between 25 and 30 years. They wore overcoats, one grey, the other dark brown. They had grey, snap-brim fedoras, were about six feet tall.

The Herald was informed that Clarkson, whose hours are from 12 o'clock midnight until 8 a.m., was back on duty Tuesday night. The two hotel employees were none the worse for their harrowing experience.

Kelvin St. Centre To Stage Pirates Tea November 15

The Pirates return to the Kelvin Street Community Centre at 281 Kelvin st. on Thursday, Nov. 15, at 7 p.m., when the Kelvin Men's Club (governing body of the Centre) hold their second annual tea and carnival.

All 40 members of the club will be dressed in pirates costume and the feature of the tea will be Treasure Island, complete with Long John Silver and his parrot and buried treasure.

One may have their fortune told by tea or by sand and with a gala carnival in the hold of the ship, fun will be had by young and old attending. Proceeds from this annual event will be used for recreation and maintenance at the centre.

The club wishes to take this opportunity of inviting the general public to this affair and see the return of the pirates. The tea and carnival are under the direction of chief pirate J. Goodrick.
